The Homestuck Team Reported our Discord. The Subreddit is Next.

Context: the reason this post was written is because screenshots have been leaked from the Official Homestuck Discord server showing that they are probably responsible for getting the unofficial server taken down, or at least conspired to do so. It is also clear that they have been attempting to mass report this subreddit (and two others) since February in an attempt to get them taken down too. There are a few other things shown in these screenshots which are immediately disturbing. We believe this to be a continuation of a pattern of behavior of legal intimidation and malicious interference towards Homestuck community spaces and members. This document contains those logs, alongside brief descriptions of their content and what they mean.

Glossary:

- Makin: Founder of the Homestuck subreddit (est. 2010) and unofficial Discord (est. 2016)
- "HSD": Another name for the unofficial Discord
- Vibri: Owner of the Official Homestuck Discord (est. 2025)
- Gio: Developer of the Unofficial Homestuck Collection, blogger

Brief timeline of other notable events:

Late 2019/early 2020 - Emails concerning the incident where writers for Homestuck^2 baselessly accuse the Homestuck subreddit and Discord of being a "den of child molesters." Hussie tries to take over the unofficial Homestuck Discord with a peaceful resolution that immediately gets walked back, discussions fall through.

Late 2020 - Gio publishes an article about the mishandling of Hiveswap's development.

2021 - Youtuber Sarah Z is legally threatened by Andrew Hussie after her coverage of Homestuck, informed by Gio's reporting, accrues millions of views.

Mid 2025 - Gio publishes an article about the Unofficial Homestuck Collection, including extensive details of legal and personal harassment he's suffered from official team members.

Late 2025 - Vivziepop's company Spindleroo releases the Homestuck Animated Pilot, and the Official Homestuck Discord is created.

Early 2026 - The unofficial Homestuck Discord goes down for, until now, unclear reasons.

Cami 18-Sep-25 10:36 AM
If you can find evidence of Makin inciting harassment campaigns send it my way and we can start building a case for it. It needs to be tight though I think and something we can post publicly as a takedown of the guy in response to whatever whining he does about it and demonstrates with no uncertainty that he's a threat to our members

Cami 18-Sep-25 10:37 AM
This trial is going to be highly televised mom prismatiC 18-Sep-25 10:39 AM

Why not ask Margot the same thing. Why not ask her to send (privately) what she can.

Cami 18-Sep-25 10:39 AM
Good idea

mom prismatiC 18-Sep-25 10:40 AM
This could be useful and this will almost certainly calm her down.

Andy The Illusion 18-Sep-25 10:40 AM
I think she would be more than willing to do so seeing what her most recent FRAF post is (edited)

Fuller G-Verse 18-Sep-25 10:41 AM
If you do ask her cami make sure not to phrase it ask "so we can start to build a case" so we dont give the impression we dont know any of the shit makin has been doing

i could reach out to her

vibri 18-Sep-25 10:41 AM

Fuller G-Verse 18-Sep-25 11:11 AM
Who else was asking to do communications

Cami 18-Sep-25 11:11 AM
Vibri was interested to get Gio dirt

Cami 18-Sep-25 11:12 AM
But I don't think that's super relevant to this outreach

Fuller G-Verse 18-Sep-25 11:12 AM
I think once we lock in on who's communicating we can move on since this channel is ramping up in reports as we get closer to schools closing

mom prismatiC 18-Sep-25 11:13 AM
I was proposing to ask Margot the Gio dirt with my main account (she doesn't know I'm a mod here), in order to reduce the danger to HSO in case of leak that we're gathering dirt, but since Cami and Vibri want to talk to her directly, well, you can forget my proposition I guess. (edited)

While I personally wouldn't go with this its definitely worth considering, dont be too hard on yourself (edited)

mom prismatiC 18-Sep-25 11:15 AM
Oh, sorry, maybe I badly phrased, "you can forget my proposition" was in a more "I trust Cami and Vibri with this" tone, not in a "Well okay guess I wasn't giving a good proposition" sense.
Except if I also didn't understand the "Don't be too hard on yourself" thing.

vibri 18-Sep-25 11:15 AM yeah go ahead if you want to handle it cami, i was only offering because honestly i think we could 2 way share the things i have but, it might be better advised just to have you handle it then, since margot has no idea who the fuck i am and i might seem odd or untrustworthy

OTHER HOMESTUCK RESOURCES

Near the start of the official server's existence, the organizers coordinate to seek out evidence of people they see as opposition, specifically Makin and Gio. They do this with the recognition that their efforts would cause harm to the official server if they're found out. They also discuss tracking down "Margot Kix," a fan they mistakenly believed had "dirt" on the unofficial Homestuck Discord.

The organizers discuss the HSD just having gone down. They immediately consider the option of taking the vanity URL. After moderator Mutie claims to have been responsible, Vibri explicitly says that they "all made reports" (another mod confirms "we've been making reports the entire time") in a systematic effort to get the HSD taken down.

ok well like for one u cant take an invite link for a server that just went down, they have cooldown on things like that, 2 i would only nab the link temporarily for them if it was free floating so that no troll takes it, i dont really care about the dumb vanity link LOL

Outside modchat in a public channel, Vibri says that they don't care about a "dumb vanity link," and would only grab it temporarily so no troll takes it. They claim to know nothing about the ban, blatantly lying on the public side in order to cover up their involvement.

andrew just got a restraining order against [redacted] granted today! she'll be served within the next few hours :)

oh fuck yes

meowcatMutie 25-Feb-26 01:03 PM
hell yes. tell andrew i said congratulations

vibri 25-Feb-26 01:04 PM
what this means for us:
- she is unable to talk about andrew, their friends, OR THEIR STAFF
- THIS INCLUDES US
- the protection order is IMMEDIATE following whenever she is served, which will happen before the end of the day, means that anytime after she is served if she continues posting about ANY OF US she will be in direct violation of her restraining order

if you see her posting about us anytime after today, LET ME KNOW. she will GO TO JAIL

meowcatMutie 25-Feb-26 01:04 PM
LETS GOOOOOOOOOO

vibri 25-Feb-26 01:04 PM
this also means she will most likely have to take down her blog, but we will be sending in the protective order to tumblr and asking them to comply with it

vibri 26-Feb-26 10:51 AM i called the PD and apparently they tried to serve [redacted] last night and no one answered the door 💀

vibri 26-Feb-26 10:51 AM
they said they're trying to serve her again today

vibri 26-Feb-26 10:52 AM
my hypothesis, just speculating, maybe maybe not, but like... either they werent home or her family intentionally didnt answer the door to the police, which lowkey would kind of make sense cus ik that her family is immigrants- .... so........... i wouldnt answer it either 😰 ...... but who knows, maybe they were out or busy

vibri 26-Feb-26 10:52 AM
but they'll try again today

vibri 26-Feb-26 11:13 AM
yeah [redacted] is dead 🔥

vibri 25-Feb-26 06:50 PM
HDKJHS

The organizers discuss banning Makin without cause, in direct opposition to their stated policy of not banning people for events outside their server. They openly discuss fabricating reasons for getting rid of him and say it's because he's "just kind of a dick."

The insinuation of Makin planning "actually illegal shit" is based on the following idea discussed in a public channel: a legal loophole would have made it technically possible to file a claim for ownership of Homestuck in court. It was also immediately recognized that such a case would be thrown out of court on principle because it is plainly not actionable. A joke is all that discussion ever was, and insisting that Makin took the possibility seriously is farcical.

Vibri's main concern through all this is the timing of the ban seeming suspicious and making them look responsible.

Earlier, in an unrelated incident, the organizers discuss a fandom member who had a blog called "davekat-sucks," or "dks." Vibri mentions that Andrew Hussie secured a restraining order against this person; she's been tracking their activity and contacting a local police department in order to get the fan served with legal paperwork, including a restraining order. Vibri and others recognize that dks is an immigrant and may be hesitant to answer the door over fears of getting deported by ICE.

Discussion about Gio: similar to dks, they suggest that a restraining order can be filed against him. One moderator named discordantObserver proceeds to rant about Gio's article on the Unofficial Homestuck Collection. discordantObserver claims that he "sexually harassed a woman" and/or spread her nudes on the Psycholonials Discord server for a period of five years, in reference to a former Homestuck^2 writer. As far as we're aware this is a total lie; Gio has never engaged in any campaign of harassment against the former writer. Further, this user accuses "a whole community" of this behavior, presumably meaning the unofficial Discord, when in fact it was against the rules and moderators removed such offenders.

The mod team decides to use alts and other methods for mass reporting three subreddits related to Hussie, including r/homestuck itself; they explicitly say that they're doing this in an attempt to remove Makin from any position of influence over the fandom.

this entire fucking thing is so ridiculous because the [redacted] PD has been incredibly nice and helpful but the [redacted] PD is genuinely worthless like i called day 1 they said they couldnt give the info over the phone and that i had to go in person to my local PD in [redacted] to inquire about whether or not she was served. i was like oh ok. fair i guess..? thats rly annoying but if thats the only way...ok?
i call the next day just to poke again, a different guy picks up and tells me that they actually tried serving her twice and she dodged service but that they were trying again that night. so i was like. ok so we CAN be told over the phone... ok? so i call back later in the day before they close and a diff person picks up and tells me they couldnt give the info over the phone and that i had to go in person to my local PD............ now im tweaking bc yes they can 😭 so today i try calling, they tell me they cant give me the info over the phone again, so i call MY LOCAL PD and explain everything [redacted] told me and the [redacted] PD tells me that theres no way that they would have that information bc its being served in [redacted] OBVIOUSLY. YEAH I KNOW 😭 and told me its "really weird" that theyre refusing to give me information and that thats not standard

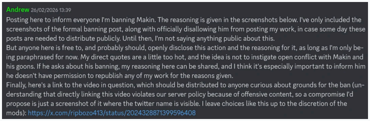
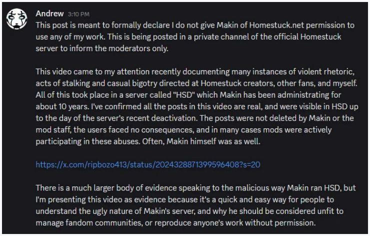
Taken together, the above screenshots tell us that the unofficial Homestuck Discord server going down was likely the result of a highly coordinated, pre-meditated group action. The organizers of the official Homestuck Discord intentionally fished for all possible information that they might find which would give their claims any credibility. They also have no compunctions against affecting other people's lives in a negative fashion, even pursuing legal action, for what are ultimately personal reasons.

From this, we believe it is clear beyond reasonable doubt that the team in charge of the official server operate in a vindictive and spiteful manner, and if they decide that they don't like you, they may try to ruin your life.

To forestall claims that Hussie was not aware of any of this, there are also screenshots where they are directly, explicitly involved:



Andrew 26/02/2026 13:39
Posting here to inform everyone I'm banning Makin. The reasoning is given in the screenshots below. I've only included the screenshots of the formal banning post, along with officially disallowing him from posting my work, in case some day these posts are needed to distribute publicly. Until then, I'm not saying anything public about this.
But anyone here is free to, and probably should, openly disclose this action and the reasoning for it, as long as I'm only being paraphrased for now. My direct quotes are a little too hot, and the idea is not to instigate open conflict with Makin and his goons. If he asks about his banning, my reasoning here can be shared, and I think it's especially important to inform him he doesn't have permission to republish any of my work for the reasons given.
Finally, here's a link to the video in question, which should be distributed to anyone curious about grounds for the ban (understanding that directly linking this video violates our server policy because of offensive content, so a compromise I'd propose is just a screenshot of it where the twitter name is visible. I leave choices like this up to the discretion of the mods): https://x.com/ripbozo413/status/2024328871399596408



Andrew 3:10 PM
This post is meant to formally declare I do not give Makin of Homestuck.net permission to use any of my work. This is being posted in a private channel of the official Homestuck server to inform the moderators only.

This video came to my attention recently documenting many instances of violent rhetoric, acts of stalking and casual bigotry directed at Homestuck creators, other fans, and myself. All of this took place in a server called "HSD" which Makin has been administrating for about 10 years. I've confirmed all the posts in this video are real, and were visible in HSD up to the day of the server's recent deactivation. The posts were not deleted by Makin or the mod staff, the users faced no consequences, and in many cases mods were actively participating in these abuses. Often, Makin himself was as well.

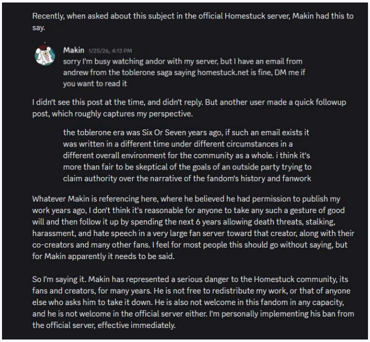
There is a much larger body of evidence speaking to the malicious way Makin ran HSD, but I'm presenting this video as evidence because it's a quick and easy way for people to understand the ugly nature of Makin's server, and why he should be considered unfit to manage fandom communities, or reproduce anyone's work without permission.



Recently, when asked about this subject in the official Homestuck server, Makin had this to say.

Makin 1/25/26, 4:13 PM
sorry I'm busy watching andor with my server, but I have an email from andrew from the toblerone saga saying homestuck.net is fine, DM me if you want to read it

I didn't see this post at the time, and didn't reply. But another user made a quick followup post, which roughly captures my perspective.

> the toblerone era was Six Or Seven years ago, if such an email exists it was written in a different time under different circumstances in a different overall environment for the community as a whole. i think it's more than fair to be skeptical of the goals of an outside party trying to claim authority over the narrative of the fandom's history and fanwork

Whatever Makin is referencing here, where he believed he had permission to publish my work years ago, I don't think it's reasonable for anyone to take any such a gesture of good will and then follow it up by spending the next 6 years allowing death threats, stalking, harassment, and hate speech in a very large fan server toward that creator, along with their co-creators and many other fans. I feel for most people this should go without saying, but for Makin apparently it needs to be said.

So I'm saying it. Makin has represented a serious danger to the Homestuck community, its fans and creators, for many years. He is not free to redistribute my work, or that of anyone else who asks him to take it down. He is also not welcome in this fandom in any capacity, and he is not welcome in the official server either. I'm personally implementing his ban from the official server, effective immediately.

This info all slots into a larger pattern of behavior where the mod team of the official server, and the people responsible for managing Homestuck as a property, want to exert as much control over the Homestuck fandom space as possible. Makin is presented as "a serious danger" who actively endorsed genuine threats, harassment, and stalking of official members, saying that people engaging in these activities went unpunished.

This is distinctly untrue: the posts in question were not deleted because the unofficial server functioned with a policy against obscuring information as much as possible (messages were deleted if they presented a genuine threat to someone's safety, e.g. doxxing), but the users in question were in fact banned and in egregious cases reported to Discord Security whenever the mod team was made aware. The mod team itself certainly did not engage in any of this behavior; the video mentioned in the screenshots above is comprised mostly of death threats sent from anonymous users unrelated to the staff of the unofficial Homestuck Discord server and acting in direct opposition to our enforced rules against harassment and brigading, all instantly bannable offenses.

Hussie and their cohorts use this sort of language repeatedly, referencing a "body of evidence" as the justification for getting rid of Makin, claiming to have more such evidence in their possession. The rest of the screenshots show that the official server's moderators were responsible for getting the server taken down using unscrupulous means. In reality, Hussie sanctioned this aggressive behavior towards Makin because he provided an avenue of discussion which allowed people to dissent against the property's owner.

Hussie and Vibri, in concert with people such as Miles and the rest of their team, have a distinct interest in monopolizing Homestuck fandom discussion. They appear desperate to have total control over the sphere of information surrounding Homestuck and are not above manipulating other people or fabricating evidence in order to accomplish this. The reason they seem to desire this is so that they can quell any voices not in total support of their handling of Homestuck, of which there are many considering Hussie and the official team's lengthy history of abusing workers' rights, personal and legal harassment of members of the fandom they deem a problem, and a severe lack of truthful communication in general; all of these subjects are generally verboten on the Official Homestuck Discord and other spaces they manage.

Andrew Hussie has a history of being litigious and over-controlling, with one example being forbidding art commissions based on Homestuck (which Vibri has since lied about, saying Hussie never wanted this to happen). This has escalated since the end of the comic into seeking total control over the fandom so that their lies about its past will not be challenged. The official team is filled with willful sycophants who think obedience without question is the only way the fandom should be allowed to operate.

As of 2026, they have begun discussing the weaponization of US police reports to silence fans who are not anonymous. If you get anything out of these screenshots, let it be this: sharing your details with the Homestuck leadership for any reason (even signing an otherwise friendly contract) will come back to bite you if you speak out. You should not be supporting these people in any respect, especially financially.

We are informing Reddit's administrators about this behavior in order to circumvent the official team's efforts to have r/homestuck and other subreddits taken down. We will continue to provide an independent forum for discussing Homestuck, without Hussie's involvement, as we have for over 15 years.

If you were redirected here from homestuck.net and are confused, you may want to read the post above. The below only applies to homestuck.net.

Done?

Why was the site gone for five days?

Essentially I'm being threatened by Andrew Hussie to "stop hosting his work" over unrelated drama, and took the site down to protect it:

https://i.imgur.com/VbS00lf.png

I'm the creator of and have maintained HS.net (and other stuff) over the last decade. Fair use law usually protects archive sites like the Wayback Machine, and 95% of the site is fan-content. The little that isn't (e.g. the lost Paradox Space comics) is not currently for sale anywhere.

But this is Andrew Hussie, a known legal troll who apparently wants to direct all fans to his communities by attacking all others. As documented above, Hussie's team recently took down our old Discord server with mass reports, taking our invite URL. They then starting reporting this subreddit, alongside this message.

I think homestuck.net is just another piece of leverage for him right now. I had to temporarily redirect it to protect it from takedown notices.

Why is it back?

I finally got some free time now that it's the weekend (I have a full-time job unlike the 46 year old millionaire harassing us). I removed everything Hussie could realistically complain about, and finally made a new Discord to replace the old one. We might still get the old one back if Discorp gets back to me, but it's stupid to keep everything in private sites, transparency is good.

We are still in danger, Hussie will send DMCAs without reason (warrant canaries here).

I may restore all content after the site is truly safe again, ideally with a blanket permission for fansites like mine that I can put up on the about page. Archive fansites shouldn't be held hostage.

P.S: If Andrew Hussie acting like this is strange to you, you might have missed when it was done to Sarah Z, to the creators of the Unofficial Collection, to the owners of roleplay websites... too many to list. Even the Scalemate merch design they just announced was taken from someone. Note that discussing any of these events in any detail will get you banned from the communities he wants you to use.

UPDATE: We've opened a new Homestuck Discord!

Homestuck Discord <==

(now "Homestuck Community" for extra safety)

(Previously stickied here: additional screenshot missed in the original statement)

How does an author go from "the franchise belongs to the fandom" and literally baking 'death of the author' into the media itself, to shutting down every 'unofficial' branch of the fandom by whatever means necessary. I don't understand, and I don't think I ever will ;-;

CadBrad • 2mo ago

The truth is that sentiment was always performative. "It's belongs to the fans! Also, here's the OFFICIAL sequel"! Okay, which is it? And/or Hussie just has the thinnest skin/biggest ego of anyone.

devvoid • 2mo ago

I still can't get over how Homestuck 2's whole point is analyzing "What does it mean to be a sequel? What makes it official? What makes this more official than any fan sequel?" and then it's hosted on Homestuck.com, based on an outline written by Andrew Hussie, is funded through the official Homestuck patreon, is promoted by official Homestuck social media channels...

It reeks of them not thinking things through even slightly. How did they not see that the whole point is contradicted inherently by the format? Are they stupid?

Dersite Light | Top 1% Commenter

Look in a slight modicum of fairness, it's not hosted on homestuck.com. The Epilogues are, but HS2 is on beyondcanon.com.

...after the rebrand with the new writing team. It still wasn't the same domain before, but the old domain was homestuck2.com, which is... somewhat less ambiguous.

Every couple years the HS Company gets to come out making a big song and dance about how revolutionary They are, how progressive, how anti-establishment fighting against capitalism and copyright law, just wanting to make the fans free to do Their stuff.

But not even talk about HS becoming public domain, its impossible or something and the copyright law Simply must be wielded as a hammer against any person not personally liked and friendly to the Company, They must be harassed, disparaged online and persecuted to the full extent of the law as the monsters They are.

ACAB tho why won't the cops simply bash down the immigrants door, how annoying.

And people still regulary slop It all down and all the insane litigious history gets swept under the rug

And then Hussie gets called a Hero of the people for selling star wars png because that day Copyright was bad and wrong but tomorrow is gonna be the Word of God

Medical-Bathroom-183 • 2mo ago

ACTUALLY THOUGH ON THE ACAB POINT. So fuckin suspicious. If theres stalking going on, sure thats not okay, but in this climate? If they get ice sicced on somebody for any reason? They need to fuckin answer for that.

Reading this, I'm losing motivation to keep rereading Homestuck+Epilogues or to read Psycholonials. Not out of spite or revenge or anything like that, it's just a sad thing to engage with - I don't like its future, and on rereading, it turns out that I don't like it as much as I used to on my first read. There are other things in my life which are far better than this.

Wishing you the best in this.

(Edit: I'm a few hundred pages before Cascade so I might reread it until then if I can find the time, but even here I'm not liking it that much. I'm just a few pages before Murderstuck)

This definitely does not surprise me. It has been clear to me that over the years Andrew Hussie wants complete control over all Homestuck spaces. The subreddit has been the biggest space that is independently managed, and we can't have that. People here might (justifiably) criticize Homestuck or Hussie! it's honestly surreal that we hit the 10th anniversary of homestuck's ending, and this is the state of things. you'd think this would be a moment for celebration, reflection, preservation, maybe even reconciliation with the community that kept the comic alive for so long. but instead, it's the exact opposite. a highlight of how much we've been fucked over the years

what stands out to me in all of this isn't just the alleged reporting or backchannel coordination, it's the contradiction: there's been a visible push for "goodwill," official spaces, curated engagement, positive brand relations etc., while at the same time there's this pattern of trying to control, suppress, or outright remove independent fan spaces. you can't really build trust with a community while also making it feel unsafe or disposable. those two things fundamentally don't coexist people aren't just arguing over which blorbo is better in spontaneous monkey discos. these are social spaces that have existed for over a decade. when you see talk about mass reporting, digging for "evidence," or even escalating to legal threats (of getting deported for not liking the current state of the comic?), it creates an environment where people feel like criticism (or, anything short of mindless enjoyment) could backfire seriously what's frustrating is how much this kind of behaviour actively damages preservation efforts, too. i've been working on a site (Homestuck.fan) aimed at cataloguing history, news, and community developments, and stuff like this has genuinely stalled progress. not because of "drama fatigue" (... though that hasn't helped), but because the homestuckosphere is unstable. sources disappear, communities get deleted, and people become understandably hesitant to speak or document anything. it becomes harder to build an accurate historical record when the present is being fucked in real time i also want to explicitly commend the r/homestuck mod team, and Gio, here, because the level of documentation and transparency they've provided is genuinely invaluable. regardless of where anyone falls on the situation, taking the time to compile timelines, preserve evidence, and make it accessible to the wider community is the kind of work that keeps things from being quietly skewed or buried. that kind of openness is one of the few things actually reinforcing trust and allowing people to form their own informed conclusions this goes without saying, but homestuck's legacy was never just the comic. it was the forums, the blogs, the fanworks, fansites, the con meets, the messy, decentralised ecosystem of people talking to each other. trying to consolidate that into tightly controlled "official" channels while undermining everything else only acts to turn natural growth into a sanitised, neatly polished turd best of luck, r/homestuck team, and happy 4/13.

BeholdingBestWaifu • 2mo ago

What bothers me is that it would cost them nothing to just let fan spaces exist, hell the way they would have prevented almost all the drama incidents would have been by just doing nothing.

thecatteam • 2mo ago

Yeah ever since the (original) discord situation I've been so annoyed at these attempts to take over established communities and projects. It would just be so much easier to create their own spaces, which would by definition attract members because they're "official." They finally started doing that after literal years with FRAF, the official discord, and the website rerelease. I naively thought that with the success of all three they would finally be chill. The irrational vendettas against specific people are just too powerful for them to appreciate what they've built, I guess.

hyperFeline • 2mo ago

I've been dealing with stalking and harassment on and off for years, I can't imagine dealing with that from the actual crew involved with something you love (tho in my case it may be don't know yet)

Btw while I respect artist's wishes, this isn't an issue about copyright. Devsisters is another company that tends to be stricter about their ips rep and they aren't going around deleting fan servers, they haven't even banned someone LEAKING their games because they don't discuss that in official servers. HS crew has no excuse, I want to respect them but this behavior if true isn't acceptable.

Makin idk if you see this but dm me here or on discord. May still have some group dms from 2017 2018 that are relevant to this because I feel like thats where it may have started. Or at least a whisper.

Imagine saying ACAB while using the cops as your personal hounds (as well as ICE, potentially) over internet drama. The height of idiocy.

My theory: hussie is in a shitton of debt for hiveswap and to viz (books not selling well, but he still has a financial obligation) and seems to be under impression the only way he can turn homestuck into the cash cow he thinks he missed out on in the 2009-2016 period is by garnering absolute, utter control over everything. controlling narratives on controversies, controlling workers, controlling fan spaces. he wants the kind of control disney has over their properties because he seems to believe that maybe, maybe with a tv show, maybe with a online store selling fruit boxers, maybe with a video game thats been delayed for the 20th time, and by repivoting all these issues into the lump box of being "harassed" he can somehow get back on his feet.

his poor management has turned homestuck into a massive muck of debt that he cant escape from, and to be frank he's a manchild with no actual management experience, so he thinks the only way he can "win" is by using teenage internet warriors to fight his copyright battles.

They were mentioning this stuff in the HSOD a couple of minutes ago at the time of typing this. I. . . feel disillusioned. I only just recently got into Homestuck over half a year ago, and I was so enamored with its world, its story, its characters, and everything else that it had to offer. I knew that Hussie had done some rather underhanded shit in the past both during and after the webcomic's tenure(massive understatement, I know), but. . . this? This is a new low entirely. It sucks even harder because despite it all, I still love Homestuck, but if these are the guys running the show? I might have to leave.

Honestly it's far from new low, Hussie did the same thing in the past, that's just coming back to old habits.

Wow, what a shitshow. Despite everything, I wanted to think better of the new direction Homestuck as a brand seemed to be moving in, but here it is in black and white. I'm struck by how these people talk to each other--they know what they're doing is in bad faith and that most of the fandom would not find it justifiable; they're worried about leaks (apparently rightly so) and are brainstorming cover stories for their actions. The bit where Vibri mockingly uses the image of an insane conspiracy theorist to discuss her concerns that Makin might conclude that Homestuck Official is behind the Discord being taken down, while knowing that conclusion would be correct, is particularly bleak. Not to even mention acknowledging that she's fully aware of the implications of sending the police after an immigrant in the current American political climate and then joking "dks is dead soon" 20 minutes later.

Worth noting, as someone who has been keeping track, I think this is the first time anyone affiliated with Homestuck has actually made a concrete allegation against Gio beyond "he behaved in a way that made some women in the company uncomfortable", and it's so extreme that it immediately scans as false just by making everything they said about him beforehand look like a comical understatement. They're saying he's been spamming a trans woman's nudes (they say Gio mentioned her in the UHC post, so I'm assuming from context they mean Aysha) to her workplace and various Homestuck-related servers for the past five years. Tellingly, this is vaguely attributed to "a whole community plus a blogger" rather than just Gio specifically. We already saw in Gio's Discord logs in the UHC post that apparently people close to Hussie had Gio confused with someone else, so I wouldn't find it hard to believe that if this is describing real events at all, it's probably ones Gio had nothing to do with.

Anyway, seeing the way these people think, Psycholonials is starting to feel like it was basically autobiographical, only Hussie chose the crown.

Pretty sure the nude leaking thing was spelled out years ago and quickly debunked because the story didn't add up and the employee targeted wasn't involved in any capacity that would expose her to being harassed like that when it allegedly began. The fact that they're still using this lie is one of infinitely many signs of the kind of people we're looking at.

I'm not even halfway through everything but jesus these people are assholes. And so weirdly childish? Like, why does this witch-hunt mean so much to them? These messages look like they're from teenagers. This is the current official Homestuck team?? 😬 Yikes.

Idk maybe I'm being pretentious or whatever, but I think these folks need to go outside and talk to some people out in the real world. Having an adult job out in the adult world really gives you perspective on what's important in life. This bullshit is so meaninglessly exhausting and it's actually making me embarrassed for them.

Edit: I finished reading and this shit is actually vile. I know I said it above, but I truly think most of those people are teenagers. I don't believe they grasp the weight of their actions. This could ruin someone's life. Reacting with viscous glee about someone maybe getting deported? A person with a family and a life completely disconnected to bullshit fandom drama, a life that would be completely uprooted if this were to happen??

All this because Hussie wants total control over Homestuck fandom spaces. Fuck that.

What an awful way to spend Egbert's 30th.

Hussie wrote alot of kind words regarding so much Death of the Author; that the franchise belongs more to the people than themself.

If they won't stick to that when it inconveniences them, I say too little too late.

When will they understand that you can't just OWN a fandom?
No matter what they do, either the fans will migrate and community will grow elsewhere, or they will stab at every part of it until they bleed it dry.

Homestuck was better off left alone at this rate.

GiovanH • 2mo ago • Edited 2mo ago (that one)

A note regarding "takedowns":

My understanding is the takedown of homestuck.net is similar but mechanically different from the takedown of the UHC site.

Makin was previously hosting `homestuck.net` with (what he understood to be) permission from Andrew. Now that he's seen the messages where Andrew has retracted that permission and suggested legal action, Makin has taken down the site to preemptively prevent a DMCA takedown or other legal action. He is anticipating future legal action and taking steps to prevent liability. Andrew has loaded the gun but not taken the shot.

This is not quite what happened with the Unofficial Homestuck Collection. The UHC did not preemptively remove any content. Our content removal(s) came after receiving a real DMCA request and formal cease and desist from Andrew's lawyer. We were shot and had to react to that.

The UHC was able to do this because we (similarly to hs.net) were operating with formal approval from the IP holder right up until the point where they changed tunes and sent takedown demands. In contrast to this, Makin has had their approval revoked but hasn't gotten specific demands yet (to my knowledge), which is a state the UHC was never in. (See: estoppel.)

At a high level, it is correct that this legal bullying is a long pattern of behavior that's lasted more than a decade, and Homestuck needs to release clear statements approving fanwork and archival (not just non-binding good vibes) to allow projects like the UHC, the HICU, FRAF, HS.net, the MSPA wiki, etc. operate freely and independently without being under constant threat by whatever entity holds the Homestuck IP.

temporalCompanion • 2mo ago

I never wavered, I never started from the community, I never lost interest since the day I was introduced to it. So many people talk about growing out of Homestuck, and then those who end up here some day got back into it, but I never went through that process. It never left me.

This is making me not want to engage with the comic or anything else that comes of this anymore. If they take the long established fan spaces apart by force to make themselves the only available option, then I want nothing to do with it.

I was so excited when the Official Discord Server came out, I thought this would be an opportunity for new beginnings and better engagement, but it seems like they're determined to do exactly the opposite of that.

bradyargo • 2mo ago

I miss the Always Sunny streams from the discord and all of the other community events, the vibe of the "official" server is all over the place and way too corporate, fan spaces should be allowed to exist separate from the powers that created the work.

I full predict within the next year or so, the "official" homestuck side of things is going to collapse. I believe the pilot isn't going anywhere with how low the views are even six months later with the backlash for the bad writing and the dumpster fire that is the pilot merch. (The other official store as well is overpriced and low quality) Hiveswap isn't moving forward because nobody wants to really be in charge of that project. Seriously, it's been a WIP for what 9 years now and we just barely have the demo for act 3. Beyond canon is going to be beyond canon. Only the teens on twitter who don't know any better are the ones who really care about it anymore. The official discord is unsafe for minors and the mods are all on their high horse with their power trips. Once things "collapse", Hussie is going to take whatever money he made off merch sales and dip, leaving Vibri to pick up the mess.

According_Comb9242 • 2mo ago

These people are pretty horrible and worse yet, unfunny. How could the creator of Homestuck allow these sycophants and terminally online clowns so close to him that they inadvertently ruin the only thing that he is remembered for.

Oh it's psycholonials. Hussie seems pretty committed to the bit
